WAITING FOR A FARM

Jim Randall and Steve Hall sat in the village inn of the latter evening after it was closed to outsiders, smoking the pipes of peace and friendship, and waiting for the morning.

It was a plain country inn, where you could buy almost anything, but it also showed signs of modern improvement, such as the increase of population and the times demanded it.

Steve Hall had inherited it from his father, having come into possession a year before, married the girl he loved and settled down, which happy couple were now waiting for the morning.

"If you love Jim Randall so much to have her, why don't you marry at once?" asked Steve, who was waiting for the morning.

"Oh, I can't afford it," answered Jim, looking at the clock. "I want to get married, but I don't want to get married until I have a farm of my own."

"What do you mean by that?" asked Steve, who was waiting for the morning.

"I mean that I don't want to get married until I have a farm of my own," answered Jim, looking at the clock.

When the rain often takes the form of sleet and snow, on a line running around the world from four to eight of nine degrees, there are patches over silver seldom comes to fall. This is called the "zone of constant precipitation," but at the same time it is very variable. Thus, for instance, when the town of Panama has a six months' dry season and a very fine one, Colon, on the other side of the world, has a six months' rainy season, it is due to the fact that the town of Panama is in a low valley, while Colon is on a high plateau.
